LONDON LETTER.

(From Our Own Correspondent.) LONDON, January 10.

Of course, the event of this week has been in Peking not in London. The triumphal return of the Mother of Mischiefhas taken place with full éclat of kneeling soldiers, gilded dragons and all the pump and pageantry dear to the Celestial court, a mighty mixture of the great and base. One thinks of the humourist, He was received at the Wharf by the who, seeing an occlesiastical dignitary Office is awakening in response to a in full panoply, button-holed him and asked humbly, I beg your pardon, but are you anyone particular? Their Majesties, the malevolent mistress of machinations and the shadow-emperor, are back in the 1ath and plaster palaces, but I doubt whether we gain very much thereby. Straws have their use as indicators of the direction of the wind, Our only satisfactory consolation is that Li Hung-chang has ceased from troubling, and has left no successor. First then, the alien government. The Manchu dynasty is not fruitful of evil because it is Manchu. We do not grumble in England because the House of Saxe-Coburg is of non-British origin. This leads to the second point, that the administration is rotten from the core to the skin. From the village ti pao to the Provincial Viceroy, every official is notoriously venal. No tax can reach the higher authorities without a substantial portion having been left adhering to the hands through which it has passed. Appointments in the first instance depend on examinations which are frequently bogus. These provide a turbid source for a polluted stream, and, of course, if Chinese officials are dishonest, all patriotism and principle cials, who, having not even Chinese nationality, need no excuse for stuffing their pockets with Russian gold. Tel a Chinamar these things and he shrugs his shoulders. It is all true enough, what are you going to do about it?

There are others who speak most positively, and who say the Emperor has still a strong mind, but that the Empress Dowager forbids him to say anything and threatons him if he utles any views confiary to her own.
